

Ickford News

Once upon a time in the magical land of Ickford, there was a school. It was no ordinary school; in fact it was an extraordinary school as the children were the most talented, kindest and well behaved of all the lands.

There was a time when the school's mighty ruler was obliged to take the older children from the school to another land, in order to enhance their fitness and physical well-being and in doing so, left his kingdom in the care of his trusty noblemen.

During this time, the remaining children had exciting adventures. They learned how to draw and sketch like the artist Quentin Blake; they practised in the art of mosaics; they explored character expressionism; they listened and learned from real life authors. The children even ventured to the nearby land of Oxford where they shared their own stories and acted out scenes.

This is not all they did. Four of the bravest amongst them went into battle, armed with a tennis racket and a ball (Miss Eleanor, Miss Sayer, Master Stanfield and Master Parsler). They were once again victorious, winning with honour and upholding the reputation of their mighty leader's name.

Festivities took place in the great hall, where by the children dressed up and shared their favourite stories with the educators.

Before long the ruler of the school returned, bringing with him stories of adventure from faraway lands. The children shared their experiences with the older children and, as the story tellers say, they all lived happily ever after.
